

Serin

Serinus serinus

Category A

Rare passage migrant

27 records

Breeds across central and southern Europe from France eastwards to Baltic states, and south to north Africa. There was a major, mainly northward, expansion of its range which began in the nineteenth century and continued into the twentieth, reaching northern France in the 1950s and Finistère in the 1970s. There was an increase in records in Britain at this time and even sporadic breeding, but it did not become established. The species is vulnerable to cold wet weather and unable to cope with more northerly winters. It also appears to show a reluctance to cross open water, also being very scarce to the north of the Baltic Sea. Winters mainly within southern part of its range.

A scarce but regular coastal passage migrant in Kent.

First recorded at Folkestone and Hythe in 1993 when there were five sightings, which remains the record year to date. Thereafter it was recorded with some regularity, with a total 14 occurrences in all of the next seven years to 2000. Since then however there have been just eight further records, and only five in the last 13 years. The records by year are shown in figure 1.

The majority (78%) of records have been in spring or early summer, mainly between the 3rd April (week 14) and 20th May (week 21), with one on the 1st June. The recent summer record (on the 25th July 2012) is the only occurrence in that season to date. The autumn records have occurred between the 22nd October (week 43) and 21st November (week 47). The records by week are given in figure 2.
